

The Halloween Party Pooper Bailout Package

Every party has it's pooper, but this year it ain't gonna be you!!! Your heart is racing and your palms are clammy, but it's not your office mates costumes that are giving you the chills. It's the frightful realization that you forgot to dress up. Well simmer down because Ambi has you covered. Here is the first annual Halloween Party Pooper Bailout Package. I have two unisex customs that are guaranteed to save you from enduring a lunch-long barrage of stale wise cracks. Enjoy!

Dogstar

The Pug Rocker

Anytime I have a chance to mix and mashup two of my favorite things, I pounce. I love me some rock and I love me some pugs. Add them together and you got one party animal ready to turn your office party up to eleven. Again, like "El Hefte," the more business-minded your attire, the better this costume comes off. Instead of business as usual, you are now in the business of rockin the cubicles.

Tips for being the "Dogstar"

1. Again, swagger is king with this. Crossed arms, raised chin and alot of sass will go far.
2. Feel free to loosen the tie, untuck one side of the shirt or blouse and, by all means, raise those collars.
3. Rather than try to blend in. This costume is best used when drawing attention to oneself. Dance, hoal, and by all means, drink out of a bowl. Just be the life of the party for once.
4. Again, this is a workplace, so be mindful when answering the question: What style of music do you play?

Dogstar

The Mask

Cut it out around the outside.

Cut out the eyes and nose(tongue are too, if you dare).

Use string or a rubber band to attach around your noggin.

Go forth and rock out, you dog.

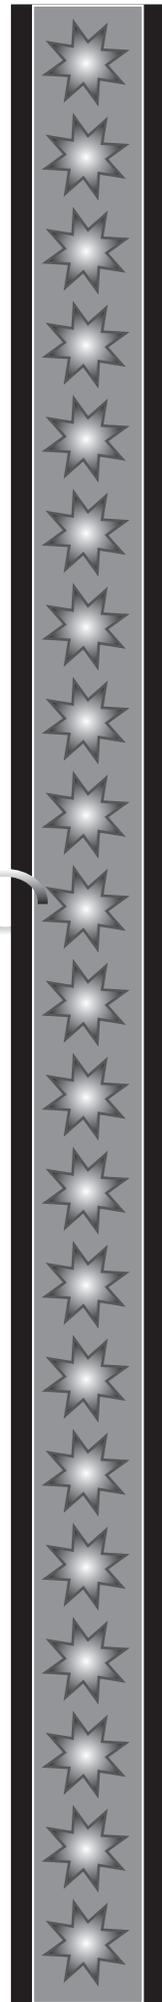

DogStar

Tail & Collar

Cut out around the outside (do the best you can).

Get some double-sided tape or make do with the tape around the office.

Fold tail in half, tape to backside belt loop.

ambidextrous

El Hefe

The Boss

It's halloween, so don't just dress up, take the opportunity to give yourself a promotion—if only for just an extend lunch. Be the boss of the office octagon. Nothing says "back off or get smacked down" like a lucha libre wrestling mask. I know what you are thinking, "but I'm in my work clothes!?" That's great, this costume works best with a suit, tie, or your favorite power blouse. Just remember, your still at a place of business so any head-butts, foul language, or ripping off of shirts is at your own risk. So press print, get your boss on!

Tips for being El Hefe (the boss)

1. Walk with swagger, the more the better. If someone gets cute with you. That's perfect, that's what were aiming for. Remember nothing fuels the wrestlers power like a jeering crowd. Own it. Clap for them, raise your arms in the air and egg them on for more laughs.
2. Take a prominent place in the party, like next to food table. Turn around. Face the crowd. Fold those arms. Raise your chin slightly upward and drink in the awe of the crowd.
3. Remember, if someone is determined to break down your character or is just plain tap dancing on your nerves, you have the luchadors ultimate kiss off. Look them in the eye, pucker up and give them the air-kiss goodbye. This works best with with the brush off. Take one hand out your folded stance and shoofly them away. Use as little effort as possible, a simple motion of a finger works awesome. Less is more with these moves because your saving your energy to handle your business in the ring. The ring of big business!

El Hefe

The Mask

Cut it out around the outside.

Cut out the eyes and mouth.

Use string or a rubber band to attach around your noggin.

Go forth and own the office.

El Hefe

Belt & Wrist Band

Cut it out around the outside (I know, the belt is a tough one).
Get some double-sided tape or make do with the tape around the office.
Fasten as you see fit.

ambidextrous^{studio}

www.ambistudio.com